I received your letter this morning and still cannot quite believe the accusations made against my name. Whilst I was parked at Easterfield Lane Saturday night, I most certainly not was taking part in any activities accused in the letter. The lady in the car is a friend of the family, and most importantly, a former nurse. Whilst I do not want to, or expect to go into great detail about my health, I asked my friend to check something private I was greatly concerned about. The lights in the car were on for that reason, it required checking. Does he really think I'd be involving myself in indecent activities, with the lights on, and taxi sign on? These accusations against my name are outrageous and he really should have made sure what he saw was accurate before making them. This isn't on, and I'm not happy. My health is still a concern and not even my family know anything about it.

My speeding fines are also something I'm sceptical about, I drive around hundreds of roads every single week as I work really hard, so to get caught on the same camera, on the same road in Plymouth doesn't seem right. However if confirmed I at least am prepared to accept my carelessness. I'm still waiting for the details of the potential punishments.

Overall this has been a very worrying time for me in lots of ways. I've worked so hard to get to where I am, to what I consider my dream job. There is absolutely no way I'd do anything to purposely jeopardise it.

Thank you.
