Hello Steve,

Having had a look at Simon's responses to you regarding the reason for his accident being fog there is categorical proof that this is untrue. There was no fog on the road. My daughter has a video on her phone of the overturned car after the crash which will show this and can be sent to you should you need this. It is also not for Simon to say that the passengers were not hurt. As you know I am only speaking on my daughter's behalf, however documentary evidence from her attendance at A&E and GP follow ups and time off work due to injury can all be provided to you if your team requires this. I am aware the other female passenger [REDACTED] can also provide this. It is true that they declined to go to A&E at the time of receiving in ambulance paramedic care, however this was due to them being scared and in shock, young and mistakenly thinking they would be in some kind of trouble. My daughter being 17 and with two young male friends who she had not told me were staying at the holiday cottage. They did all subsequently go to A&E in the day time. For [REDACTED] it is her mental health that has been most affected by this accident. She is still suffering flash backs, it has affected her own driving and she is fearful as a passenger. Not things she should have to be enduring.

[REDACTED]

Kind Regards

[REDACTED]
